2) Your colleague says MOOC is learner-centric through the discussion forum. Do you think making a discussion forum available is sufficient for learner-centricity? 1 point

- A. Yes
- B. No

No, the answer is incorrect.
Score: 0

Feedback:

Feedback: (for option A. Yes) Just making a discussion forum available is not sufficient to facilitate peer learning. The initiative to engage in discussion with peers is left to the learner. What makes discussion forum learner-centric is having explicit activities that facilitates learners to have a focused discussion and hence fosters peer learning. Refer LeD1.2: Why LCM? for detailed discussion on learner-centricity of MOOCs.

Feedback: (for option B. No) Discussion forum is a necessary condition for a learner-centric MOOC because the forum facilitates peer learning. But just making a discussion forum available is not sufficient to facilitate peer learning. The initiative to engage in discussion with peers is left to the learner. What makes discussion forum learner-centric is having explicit activities that enables learners to have a focused discussion on the course content and hence fosters peer learning. Refer LeD1.2: Why LCM? for detailed discussion on learner-centricity of MOOCs.

Accepted Answers:

B. No

3) How many peers have you interacted (i.e. replied to) this week? (numerical answer)

Hint

No, the answer is incorrect.

Score: 0

Feedback:

Feedback: As discussed in Q1, the major benefit of interaction within the discussion forum is the access to diverse insights that your peers bring in. This is much greater and more valuable than what the course team brings in. Hence it is important that you interact with maximum number of peers as possible.
