

Publishing the content given by a Subject Matter Expert (SME) to NPTEL as a web/video course

"NPTEL contents are distributed to the public at large, both in India and abroad, under a Creative Commons License CC BY and SA through websites and mirror sites set up from time to time. The access to the websites will remain free all the times. BY refers to any user other than the creator, to give attribution to the source files of the authors he or she wants to modify and SA means he /she shares the modified source with at least one free e-copy on the server accessible to all the users (Share Alike). For more details the publishers and you may examine the License no. 4 and the license agreement under that category. The URL is www.creativecommons.org. By arrangement with the funders and organizers of NPTEL project (Government of India and seven IITs and IISc) , the creator of the course has the freedom to modify his or her content and publish this as books while leaving the source at NPTEL site unaltered and in perpetual free access to all the viewers of the site.

If you are one of the authors of a course, the above is applicable to only the writings that you contributed under that course. You or your coauthors do not otherwise need any permission from NPTEL or Government of India for publishing books of your NPTEL contributions which have been accepted from you by the NPTEL as belonging to your intellectual creation and submitted to the project for the above permitted activities. They may not contain materials from other sources copyrighted for distribution by that source. (Figures, tables, charts or other material collected or referenced by you on from Internet or other sources). This clarification thus does not apply to any such materials. NPTEL has taken best efforts to ensure that the contents of its website and the information provided therein are accurate. NPTEL makes no warranties as to the information provided in its website or to the materials distributed by any author or publisher in this regard. "